French poodles are not to be seriously considered. There remain the Dachund and the Danish mastiff, neither of them quite satisfactory. The new dog hails from the Low Countries, and is not so much a novelty as a revival. He has been rediscovered by the accident of the Exhibition at Brussels. Dogs were to be an attraction there, and the great desideratum was to be patriotic and, if possible, local. Of course the milk-carrying dogs would be collected in great force, and it accord as if Flanders would have little else in the canine world to rely upon. Then it was remembered that generations ago, when railways were scarce in the land, there was a little black terrier called a spits, largely used on the canal beats that then carried on the commerce, and, indeed, the traffic of the Low Countries. His chief qualitiesalmost legendary—were that he was death on rats, and unapproachable as a watch dog. He was a clever little fellow too, vitacious dut. An attempt was made to procuse some for the show. It proved that there was plenty of life in the old breed still. There are yet barges and canal boats in Holland, and they had spits still on board. A very good show was got together. The spits became popular, and we shall, no doubt, 8000 see him here.

dicted for a bare intention to commit crime. I read the part of section 11 of the report of the Judges to the House of Lords, page 317, with the object of shewing what was a conspiracy—and the evidence by which it could be established. The portion I read was the following :-- 'A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more. but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act by lawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect the very plot is an act in itself and the act of each of the parties promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced if lawful, punishabl of for a criminal object or for the use of criminal means. And so far as the proof goes conspiracy, as Gose J. said in Rex v Brissac is generally "matter of inference deduced from certain criminal acts of the parties accused done in pursuance of an must be satisfied that the arson was the work of the three first defendants as the evidence went to show before considering the 4th defendant's case, but if they found that the fire was caused by the three then it was a matter of inference from the evidence whether the 4th defendant had anything to do with it, whether there was a previous arrangement amongst the four, and that counsel has cited the case of Regina v.
